

Martha Raymond

Before her retirement from the National Park Service in 2020, Martha Raymond worked 42 years in historic preservation and cultural resource partnerships. From 2008-2020 Martha served as the National Coordinator for Heritage Areas in Washington, D.C. During that time she served for two years as Co-Chair of the NPS Partnerships Council and represented heritage areas as a member of the NPS Tourism Council. Martha began her National Park Service career in 1976 with the Publications Branch of the National Register of Historic Places. After earning a Masters of Science in Historic Preservation from Columbia University, Martha rejoined NPS with the Historic American Engineering Record and then the Mid-Atlantic Regional Office, as team leader for Historic Tax Credit reviews. From 1991-2007 Martha worked in Ohio with the State Historic Preservation Office as Department Head for Technical Preservation Services, providing technical preservation assistance and state-level reviews of federal Historic Tax Credit projects. Since retiring from NPS, Martha volunteers locally as a member of the Historic Alexandria Resources Commission in Alexandria, VA.
